The Geological Society Club.

FOUNDED NOVEMBER 5th, 1824.

IN H. B. Woodward's centenary "History of the Geological Society," it is recorded that the Society had its origin in a "Geological Dinner Club," started on November 13th, 1807, by thirteen participants at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen Street. But with the rapid growth of the Society this Club came to an end in three or four years. One of its rules imposed a fine of 10*s*. 6*d*. for non-attendance without due notice, with the consequence that by the end of the second session (1809), "the fines from the first institution of the Society to the present time amount to £37 16*s*., of which £6 16*s*. 6*d*. only have been hitherto received"—a state of affairs which helps to explain the early demise of the Club. The fines were probably essential to cover a guarantee to the tavern-keeper of a fixed minimum attendance, such as was given by the present Club in its early days, any deficiency having to be met from the general fund.

The present Club was founded in 1824 by thirty members of the Geological Society, which by this time had a membership of over four hundred and was granted its Charter in the following year. Of the thirty, whose names are given in the List of Founders (p. 7), several had been members of the former Club. Three of these Founders, however, did not qualify afterwards for membership, and a fourth deferred doing so until twelve years later. The rules on establishment limited the number of members to forty, but this number was not attained during the early years, and was reduced to thirty-six by an amendment of the rules in 1836. The limit of thirty-six remained in force until 1904, when it was raised to the original forty again. Fellowship of the Geological Society has been, from the first, an essential qualification. The President of the Society, if a member (as he has been, or has become, in all cases save one since its initiation), is President also of the Club; in his absence the chair is taken by the member present of senior standing.

In 1825 a Supernumerary List was established, for members absent from the British Isles for the whole of a session or longer; and the scope of this list was afterwards extended to retain a few retiring members as Honorary, which distinction became recognized subsequently as a separate rank. In 1904 a new supernumerary class of Temporary Member was instituted, for nominated members of the Council of the Geological Society, if not already members of the Club, during their term of office; and in 1918 it was further decided to admit by invitation, as Temporary Honorary Members (for the session), "eminent men of science, being Fellows of the Society, temporarily resident" in this country.

With rare exceptions, the dinners of the Club, from its foundation, have been held regularly on the evenings of every Ordinary Meeting of the Society—on Fridays until 1830, and since then on Wednesdays. Up to the war period the dinners were held before the meetings, but when the meeting-time was altered, in the eventful autumn of 1915, from 8 P.M. to the present hour, 5.30 P.M., a later dining-hour, after the meetings, was adopted. The successive habitual dining-places of the Club are given in a subsequent list (p. 9).

The Club possesses records of its dinners from the beginning. These are of interest not only in containing the names, as members or as guests, of many men of the past century eminent in other pursuits besides geology, but also because they reflect the change in social conditions during the century. The earliest minute-book (1824–1826) preserves the record of bets between members, on various subjects, in terms of champagne for the benefit of the company: how long toads will live enclosed in cavities in rock (vide Woodward's "Hist. of Geol Soc.," p. 66); whether the columns in front of the Pantheon at Rome are fluted; whether they are composed of granite; whether there are instances of Mountain Limestone overlying Coal Measures in conformable position. It is to be regretted that this very practical mode of expressing faith in an opinion in disputed matters of science has fallen into desuetude.

In the dinner lists are to be found the names, as guests, of most of the distinguished foreign geologists who have visited this country during the century, together with those of British nationality who have not been members of the Club.

A few exceptional events in the annals of the Club, culled more or less at random, may here be briefly recalled.

In 1850, on Saturday, June 15th, a supplementary dinner was held at the Crown and Sceptre Tavern, Greenwich, the only occasion on which the Club has dined out of London. In 1856, on May 21st, dinner was prepared, but postponed on account of an accident to the President, Dr. Daniel Sharpe, who had suffered a fall from his horse, which proved fatal to him. In 1874, on January 21st, Sir Charles Lyell was congratulated on his membership having lasted for fifty years.

On Thursday, November 5th, 1874, an extra dinner was held at the Pall Mall Restaurant to celebrate the Jubilee of the Club. A printed list of past and present Members was issued in commemoration. The usual ordinary dinner had been held at the same place on the previous day (November 4th). The minute-book records the Jubilee dinner without special comment, but a separate autograph-list of the diners is preserved, and an account of the function appeared in Nature, November 19th, 1874. Sir Charles Lyell, "one of the only two original members now living," was present and responded to one of the toasts. It was his last attendance at the Club ; he died in the February following. The other original member referred to must have been Sir Alexander Caldcleugh (died 1888), whose active membership lasted only for the first year of the Club, but whose name was retained on the Supernumerary List until after 1843. Of the actual members at the date, the only survivor now is Sir William Boyd Dawkins, who, though not at the dinner, was then a member of four years' standing ; but Mr. William Whitaker, who is also on our Honorary List, was present at the dinner as a guest, and was elected a member in the following month.

In 1886 (November 17th) the records express the Members' regret for the death of the Earl of Enniskillen, a member for the past fifty-eight [fifty-six] years. He had continued to dine with the Club occasionally to the end of May, 1884. His term of membership stands at present the longest in the annals.

In 1899 (June 21st) we read : " This being the last meeting of the 75th session of the Club, making the 1200th meeting since its foundation, the health of the senior members, Sir John Evans and Dr. T. Wiltshire [both present] was drunk with acclamation."

In the session 1903–1904 the financial affairs of the Club were so propitious that no subscription was required: a circumstance unique up to that time (and likely to remain so).

In 1907, on the occasion of the Centenary celebrations of the Geological Society, a special dinner of the Club was held at the Criterion Restaurant on Friday, September 27th, to which the foreign and British delegates were invited. The dinner was attended by thirty-two members and eighty-eight guests, including eminent geologists from nearly all parts of the world. The expenses were met by a special subscription.

In 1910, on May 11th, there was no meeting, owing to the death of King Edward VII. In 1911, on May 24th, the meeting celebrated the accession of King George V, and his approaching coronation.

In 1912, the dinner on December 18th was attended by fifty-three members and guests, the biggest muster on record at an Ordinary Meeting of the Club. This muster is to be explained by exceptional interest in the paper at the subsequent meeting of the Geological Society, on the discovery of the Piltdown skull, by C. Dawson and Sir A. Smith Woodward.

During the war period, 1915–1919, the customary anniversary dinners of the Geological Society were suspended, but the Club carried on the tradition in a modified form by holding an extra dinner on the evening of the anniversary meetings in February from 1915 to 1919. The war conditions and regulations (restricted hours, prices, diet, etc.) are well illustrated by the records which, though too recent to require comment now, will probably be found of peculiar interest at the bi-centenary. The Treasurer of the period noted, among other things, that "the diminished food, especially fat, led men to drink more wine."

In 1924, November 5th, the Centenary Dinner is to be held at the Criterion Restaurant: the occasion of this publication.

The list of deceased and living members which follows is based on that prepared by Mr. H. W. Monckton in 1905, now revised and brought up to date.

G. W. Lamplugh,
Treasurer.

Centenary List of Members

OF THE

Geological Society Club.

From 1824 to 1924.

The names of the Founders are in dark type.
The dates before the names give the period of membership.
Single dates in dark type placed centrally indicate present membership.
Figures within brackets after the names give the dates, when ascertained, of the birth and death of deceased members.
The right-hand column contains references to obituary notices. Proc. = Proceedings, and Q.J. = Quarterly Journal, of the Geological Society, the numerals referring to the volume and page (proc. page in Q.J.). D.N.B. indicates a record in the Dictionary of National Biography in a few instances where no obituary has appeared in the publications of the Geological Society.

1824–1825	Aikin, Arthur. (1773–1854.)	Q.J. 11, 41.
